What's Up With Web Designer? A few years ago when I was working with Jason and Lucas from Creative Hive, I offered to write a story on the top freelance web designers for my friends over at Headset. We did that story. It went live in April of 2015. Well, the web designer market has changed a bit since then. Below, are five people that I think are still top in their game and are still pulling in clients by the truck load! These guys are in no particular order. It's just how I saw them.

1. Erik Erikson – Erik is the top designer that I follow and speak with on a regular basis. Erik has been around a long time, giving him the kind of wisdom that only someone who has seen a ton of design trends come and go can have. He is a sought-after designer, having worked with companies like Netflix, and helping them deliver a really beautiful website. His portfolio is filled with work that is beautiful and consistent with his tone. Here are just a few examples of Erik's work.
2. Josh Starkey – Josh is a designer that I've come to know and admire through his books. He's also a person that I have some friends with that go back a long time. His work is consistent and beautiful and just has that Josh-type quality about it. Josh can do light and dark, dramatic and subtle. He's incredible. You can find Josh's work here.
3. Brooke Morris – Brooke is another designer that I follow and have the pleasure of working with on a number of projects. She is part of a group of talented designers that work together. Brooke can do everything from clean, simple, and elegant, to very artsy and quirky. Her background is all over the place, with visual design in video games, and a creative background in illustration.
4. Thomas Romero – Thomas is the youngest of the group, and the only person on this list that doesn't work for Creative Hive. He is a prolific designer, having been around since 2012, and is also always up to new projects. His work is beautiful and has a playful, wacky quality that is so fun. He has a great portfolio, check it out here.
5. Troy Dayton –
