I have a question about theoretical physics and am looking for some insight. I can't recall ever having seen it done, but maybe I'm wrong and I'm just completely unaware of it. I wonder if it would be possible to ask about a specific thing, rather than about a general category. It seems to me that by doing so you would then get answers and comments about the specific thing you are asking about rather than the general category. Can anyone suggest where this is discussed? Example: I have a question about quantum chromodynamics What is the answer to the following: I have a question about the nature of a, b, c quarks EDIT: I would like to clarify that I am not asking if questions about specific things have value in an academic sense, just that it could be a way to get specific comments about specific things that you are asking about. A: I think that it is a waste of time, effort and energy to ask questions about specific physics topics. Some people will want to discuss certain things and make arguments. But most people will just want to know the answer. So it's important that one chooses a topic that already has many people interested, like string theory, gravity or black holes. One can read about these topics to get a sense of what is likely to happen to a specific question on the site, but it is more productive to ask a question about something that is already discussed. The central goal of this grant proposal is to provide the principal investigator with the necessary support to investigate the neurotrophic activity of neurosteroids. Neurosteroids are neuroactive steroids that are generated from the adrenal cortex and other peripheral tissues and have been shown to influence neuronal cell function and survival.
