A spectrophotometric method for detecting end-labeled DNA polymerases. An approach to detecting DNA polymerases is described. The method is based on the use of an excess of natural primer-template duplexes. The DNA polymerase binds to the primer-template duplex and displaces the primer. The displaced primer is then used as a template for a primer extension reaction. The displaced primer is annealed to a second complementary sequence attached to a solid support. The primer extension is visualized using a simple spectrophotometric procedure. The approach has been applied to the study of various DNA polymerases. more than one > would seem to be an invitation to mischief, by giving the > illusion of being able to properly limit the scope of a > single-checkbox selection. >> There are better ways of doing this.
